Cable Operators

The Commission received no information from either AT&T or Comcast.

Periodical Review

A survey of 18 to 24 year-olds shows that 49 percent do not subscribe to pay TV (cable, telco, or satellite) and 54 percent of their TV viewing is on-line, the remainder presumably either broadcast TV or someone else's pay TV.

Another survey indicates that cord cutters, those who have dropped their pay TV subscription, are happy with a combination of broadcast TV and streamed content and will not re-subscribe.

Moody's reports that the top 5 cable operators will see a 4 percent increase in cash flow in 2016 and that on-line subscriptions (Netflix, et al) are in addition to, not a replacement for, pay TV.

Based on increases in video and internet subscribers, Comcast's profit increased 3.5 percent in the first quarter of 2016.

HBO reports that less than 1 percent of those who have subscribed to its on-line streaming service have dropped their subscription delivered via cable or satellite.
